- Real or Methodological Fallacy?: Alarming Hunger in India, Written by - Md Zakaria Siddiqui, Shreya Biswas & Sunny Jose

ABSTRACT

Does the Global Hunger Index convey the actual picture of hunger in India? While there are methodological issues in the measurement of calorific undernourishment, India's performance remains poor in tackling child undernutrition, but not so in child mortality. The varying performance in the three domains calls for an objective assessment and targeted remedial measures in aspects where performance is poor.

ABSTRACT

Promoting high-tech entrepreneurship is widely accepted as a catalyst for economic growth, but outside of developed countries, there has been little independent assessment of these policies. Using a comprehensive set of data sources, we provide the first assessment of the "Startup India" programme launched in 2016. We find that Startup India has had a positive impact in reducing regional entrepreneurial disparities but has been less successful in providing financial support through its fund of funds for startups. Furthermore, the policy has failed to recognise and address the under-representation of marginalised caste groups and women entrepreneurs in the Indian start-up ecosystem.

Economic and Political Weekly - Vol.56, No.50, Dec 11, 2021

- Marginal Girlhood: Caste, Girl Child and the Trope of Empowerment, Written by - Aakanksha D'Cruz

ABSTRACT

In the wake of the reported rape and murder of a 9-year-old Dalit girl in the metropolitan capital of Delhi, it is paramount to discuss marginal girlhood. Marginal girlhood refers to alternative accounts of non-hegemonic girlhood which does not find a voice in mainstream literature and the story of the girl. Commentators on social media conveniently refer to her being a "girl-child" rather than a Dalit to dismiss the specificity of instances of caste violence against Dalit girls. This pushes the public rhetoric into a pitfall which increases the probability of misidentifying caste-based violence as gender-based violence.

- The Surrogacy \(Regulation\) Bill, 2019: Denying Choice, Defying Precedent, Written by - Alok Prasanna Kumar

ABSTRACT

In trying to “regulate the practice and process” of surrogacy through the Surrogacy (Regulation) Bill, 2019, the imagination of a “family” is limited to strict heteronormative, patriarchal definitions. This definition excludes the never married, the widowed, the divorced, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer couples and numerous other classes of people who do not seem to fit within the rigid patriarchal norms outlined in this bill. Such exclusion is in the teeth of established jurisprudence of the Supreme Court and an affront to constitutional values

- Entanglements of reproductive practices in India: Sex ratios, fertility, birthing and new reproductive technologies, Written by - Ravinder Kaur, Paro Mishra & Anindita Mahumdar

ABSTRACT

This special issue brings together emerging research around the vicissitudes of the reproductive body, as it comes undone in emerging body politics in India in relation to New Reproductive Technologies (NRT). The articles in this issue (and the second part of this issue) are a collection of compelling exploratory studies that explain the adaptability, resilience, resistance of the reproductive body and its intersection and transformation within a complex of broader societal changes relating to gender, modernization, technological intervention and the norms and values surrounding reproduction. The papers mostly emerged from a conference on “Reproduction, Demography and Cultural Anxieties in India and China in the 21st Century” held in New Delhi, India in February 2020 jointly organized by the Indian Institute of Technology, Delhi; Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad; and Indraprastha Institute of Information Technology, Delhi.

- The birth professionals: Emerging practices of birthing in contemporary India, Written by - Sreya Majumdar & Anindita Majumdar

ABSTRACT

In this paper, we define what we understand by birth professionals and examine how they have emerged in India in response to existing obstetric and gynecological practices. The focus here is on the emerging category of the “birth professional,” as we look back into how professional midwifery, doulas, childbirth educators and lactation consultants have come to define “newer” birthing options for women, with the corresponding decline of traditional midwifery in India. Finally, the paper uses ethnographic field data on professional midwives and doulas, to define what birth professionalism represents in India through case studies.

- Empowerment and subjugation: Re-conceiving commercial surrogacy as work–labor in India, Written by - Khushboo Srivastava

ABSTRACT

Feminist analysis of surrogacy remains caught between calls for abolition on the one hand, and regulation, on the other. Within this dualistic discourse, the question of recognizing commercial gestational surrogacy as a new form of work–labor remains undermined. This paper brings together the abolition-regulation conceptual framework to examine surrogacy as work–labor. Based on ethnographic research conducted in two surrogacy hotspots in India, it illustrates how women understand and construct meaning from their labor as surrogates. In doing so, the study extends the existing feminist framework, using ethnographic research, to open up a space where the labor of surrogacy can be looked upon as both empowering and subjugating at the same time and in differing ways.

- Datified body projects in India: Femtech and the rise of reproductive surveillance in the digital era, Written by - Paro Mishra & Yogita Suresh

ABSTRACT

This article examines the growing industry of digital self-tracking technologies designed for the female body, popularly known as femtech. Focusing mainly on reproductive technologies and applications, it situates femtech within the broader historical context of excluding women from research on medicine and clinical trials. Approaching femtech as datified body projects, we argue that, even though these digital reproductive health technologies enhance user capacity for self-knowledge by quantifying reproduction, they raise apprehensions about issues of reproductive surveillance. These datified body projects are not only technology-driven, but are also shaped by the neo-liberal ethos in which the state-corporate nexus shifts the onus of health management to participatory individuated forms, deemed as “empowering,” while simultaneously harnessing this user-generated data for control and profit.

- The invisible frontline workers: lived experiences of urban Indian mothers during COVID-19 in India, Written by - Ketoki Mazumdar, Isha Sen & Sneha Parekh

ABSTRACT

During the COVID-19 pandemic, Indian mothers, a vulnerable group have not received adequate attention with respect to their challenges and mothering experiences. This study utilizes a feminist theoretical framework to explore the lived experiences of a cohort of urban Indian mothers of children aged 10 years and below in the context of COVID-19. Through the qualitative research method of in-depth unstructured interviews, the study identified the following overarching themes: Challenges in mothering, Inequality of gender norms, Support and Self-compassion, Self-care and Gratitude in the context of lived experiences of mothering during the pandemic in India. The findings bolster the need to create systemic changes for enforcing stronger policies around gender equality and to recognize unpaid care and domestic work as well as build a more equitable society for women. These results also have a bearing on investigations into the long-term effects of COVID-19 on maternal mental health.

Antyajaa: Indian Journal of women and Social Change – Vol.5, 2021

- Not All Time Is Money: Women's Burden of Unpaid Work, Written by - Aishwarya Bhuta & Mridula Muralidharan

ABSTRACT

Since the 1990s, India has been witnessing a downward trend in female labour force participation (FLFP). Feminist economists have argued that the invisible labour of unpaid household work is quintessential for the social reproduction of the labour force. Time-use statistics can be useful for estimating the value of unpaid work and lead policy responses towards increasing FLFP. This study analyses the report on Time Use in India-2019 to draw insights from data on women's disproportionate burden of unpaid domestic and caregiving services. It is argued that this has implications for their participation in the labour market. The patriarchal structure of the family pushes the onus of domestic labour on women. This confines them to home-based, poorly remunerated and informal work, or excludes them from the labour market.
